

Children who are born on the unique autism spectrum may struggle with communication. Some of them may not talk or respond to your greetings. Some even avoid eye touch. Some are very sensitive to light, noise, or touch. As children with special needs, they are exploring, discovering, and learning the world, just like you and me, but in their ways. You may have such a child, know one, or have no experience. Let us learn about autism from Andy's art show.

Andy Lu is a twelve-year-old autistic artist. Andy is lucky to have observant parents and teachers learning about his talent in drawing and painting since he was little. Andy's artworks reflect his view of the world: love, joy, fun, fascinating, and sometimes mysterious. In recent years, Andy has drawn/designed different models of cars and planes as a transport enthusiast.

Andy attends a special education program at Katy ISD and will move to New Jersey with his family this summer. Besides painting, Andy loves reading, watching YouTube videos, building Lego airplanes, biking, and hiking.
